Rio Hears Hot Dog Bark and Likes It

BT UNITED PRESS Rio de Janeiro THE introduction of hot dogs in I Rio de Janeiro has been a sweeping success. The first place to sell hot dogs was one of the new skyscraper hotels, and from the first the business has boomed. Branch stands have been opened, and all are crowded, selling the "dogs" at an average price of seven cents. Riding on street cars and buses one frequently overhears some person ask another whether he has tried his first hot dog yet, and Rio's favorite comedienne, Alda Carrido, is now starred in a revue which has for its title, "Cachorro Quente," literally hot dog.

If this is obtained, Mr. Vandenberg expressed confidence that the House measure would be approved.

An examination of the vote in the House on the issue, he declared, showed that the delegations of 26 states voted for the proposal, 20 against and two split their vote.

Some of the senators from the 20 states which voted against the bill in the House, Mr. Vandenberg asserted, have assured him that they will support the measure. This more than assures victory, he stated, provided a ballot can be reached.

Emerson's wish---

WOULD that some charitable soul, after losing a great deal of time among the false books and alighting upon a few true ones, which made him happy and wise, would name those which have been bridges or ships to carry him safely over dark morasses and barren oceans, into the heart of sacred cities, into palaces

and its fulfillment

From his lifetime of reading, study and teaching Dr. Charles W. Eliot chose a Five-Foot Shelf containing just the books essential to the cultivated man.

How can you gain, in just a few delightful minutes' reading each day, that knowledge of a few truly great books which will distinguish you always as a well-read man or woman?

It is that question, of so much importance to you, that you will find answered in the booklet describing

Dr. Eliot's Five-Foot Shelf of Books

(The Harvard Classics)

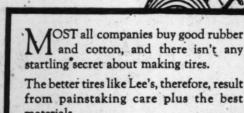

The booklet tells about ithow Dr. Eliot put into his Five-Foot Shelf "the books essential to the Twentieth Century idea of a cultivated person"; how he so arranged these books that even fifteen minutes a day are enough; how, in these pleasant moments of spare time, by using the reading courses Dr. Eliot provided, you can get the knowledge of literature and life, the culture, the broad viewpoint that progress in every walk of life demands today.

Every reader of The Christian Science Monitor is invited to have a copy of this handsome and entertaining little book which is being distributed to acquaint people with Dr. Eliot's Five-Foot Shelf of Books. Mail the coupon today.

Northwest Brazil Links

RIO DE JANEIRO (By U. P.)-The extreme northwest of Brazil has been linked to the outside world by radio with the opening of two powerful short-wave radio stations. One station is at the town of Rio Branco in the territory of Acre, and the other is at Teffe, a town on the Solimoes River, in the State of Amazonas. The region benefited by the radio stations formerly had tele-graphic connection with the national iled Amazonian territory was a very heavy drain on the system.

When Communism finally was victorious and Soviet soldiers were learning that even in socialistic armies there must be hardship and brutal discipline, the black-haired youth was making his way by night through southern Russia, a deserter from the Bolshevist army. His goal, Constantinople and freedom, he achieved.

That is the background of Harry Horlick, leader of the A. and P. Gypsies. He speaks casually of desperate encounters with the Turk and of perilous marches with the Red Army. He speaks enthusiastically of a mel-ody he heard in a Bolshevist camp and quaint strains heard in the cafés of Constantinople. road here in discussing problems of railroad management and labor.

What was regarded as one of the most significant notes of the two-day conference was sounded by Otto S. Beyer Jr., consulting engineer of the Baltimore & Ohio labor organizations. Protesting against the age limit at which the railroads refuse to employ men, which is now between 40 and 45, Mr. Beyer said that this limit could and should be raised.

Samuel Winslow, chairman of the One of the most interesting of the United States Board of Mediation out-buildings is the kitchen house, wherein is found a fireplace 12 feet charged railroad companies and labor organizations with "living in the past and looking backward" in wide, 6 feet high and 5 feet deeptheir dealings with one another. Hats to Sult the Face The hat is perhaps the most important item of the entire ensemble, for the hat will make or mar the style of the whole. Not only must it be of a color to harmonize with the coat and dresses with which it is to be worn, but it must be of a becoming shape. There is in England a certain charming duchess who year in and year out is said to wear a hat of the same general shape and trimming, however the materials may vary, because that is the type of hat that becomes her. The courage of this woman is to be admired and emulated, for to select a certain shape of hat because it happens to be the fashion of the moment or fad of the hour, puts upon the head many times a hat quite unsuited to the lines of the face and the shape and size of the head and form.

As a matter of fact, the hat should be studied for lines that accord with the face, much as the architect designs his lines to make a complete and harmonious building. At the present moment the helmet hats and those with the floppy side pieces and the hard line across the forehead are quite certain to accentuate the lines many faces a dragged-down appearthe casque-like affairs.

On the contrary, the introduction of the navy satin or moiré evening gown and of the reds and greens of the street range as a strong fashion influence in evening wear, has quite altered the position of black. The in-creasing favor bestowed upon white has also served to reduce the demand for black. Where it retains a traditional hold is in the field of laces and nets, and also in the paillette of the dressmaker who allows her and beaded-cloth novelties. The Art of Selling Frocks

By MARJORIE CARLTON London

THAT no one should sell clothes just to earn a living is the opinion of Ann Talbot, one of London's leading dress designers. She is convinced that half the bad dressing seen today must be laid at the door ing a living, instead of insisting that the interest of the client shall be their first thought.

"Like most other things good dressing is a co-operative affair," says Ann Talbot; "the client must supply poise, dignity and graciousness-for without these no woman can be considered really well turned out-and the dressmaker must bring willing service, backed by knowledge and a genuine love of her art-for it is an art. It is an easy matter to sell frocks in France. Almost every woman there has an innate sense of fitness where clothes are concerned. The average Englishwoman and American, however, needs guidance, net and tulle creations now adopt, with outstanding success, a bodice of crystal or diamanté embroidery above a dipping back or train of tulle. These, however, are the true customer comes to her for advice, will-o'-the-wisp frocks of acute extravagance, one wearing frequently necessitating a renewal of various tulle sections. It is a solitude in no rural sense. Twice a year those formidable Bakhtiari Mountains are stripped of their population. To avoid the extreme heat of summer and the fierce cold of the winter, the tribes with their flocks and every stick of their belongings, move, by what is euphemistically known as the Bakhtiari Road, to more temperate regions; and when Miss Sackville-West and her party went forward with their little caravan of mules and guards, the migrant tide had already begun to flow against them. When its companion volume, "Victory," appears in translation the whole story of the Italian liberator's work and times, as related by a gifted German woman novelist, will be available for English readers. Ricarda Huch has chosen a theme of noble proportions, the liberation and the union of the Italian states. With firm strokes she presents a fullbodied delineation of scores of men who were concerned with that great enterprise, and when she writes of Garibaldi himself she often achieves passages of grave and majestic beauty. Yet this is not a novel in the usual sense. There is no pat-tern; casual incidents and great crises are treated in the same way; year the tribes move. Numerals to Appear on Backs of Yankees

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS New York BY THEIR numbers shall the New York Yankees be known this summer.

Setting a major league precedent the baseball world champions will have 12-inch numerals sewed on the backs of their shirts so that each may be readily identified by fans in the stands. Under a tentative arrangement, the regulars will be numbered by their position in batting order. Thus a fan who does not know his Yankees can search the field until he finds a player with a huge No. 3 on his back. That will be, of course, the well-known home run hitter, George H. Ruth. No. 1 will be Earle B. Combs; No. 4, Henry L. Gehrig; No. 5, R. W. Meusel and so on. The key to the numbers will be found in the score

Yankee officials believe the plan will meet with favor among spectators who don't get many chances to see the various players. Especially will it be valuable, they believe, before game time when some 50 players will be on the field. The numbers will readily identify all of them to the fans. The scheme, common enough in other lines of sport, has also been tried in baseball, but

Fairy Tents

Waking last night I heard a quiet sound, The gentle pattering of summer rain; Sliding from shining leaf to thirsty ground, Calling the sleeping earth to drink again.

And when the rain was past, and sunshine, all The fragrance flung abroad of sweet June scents, There, where the rhododendron blossoms fall, I sought upon the ground for fairy tents. Heavy with rain, their transient beauty spent, Those fragile, roseate blossoms strewn around, Seemed to my eyes a host of fairy tents, A newly risen elfin camping ground.

And if I sought with open eye and ear, I wonder, should I hear the tiny tramp Of elfin feet? Where scattered blossoms lie, Find tented dwellings of a fairy camp?

I look where rhododendron flowers are fair, When rain has fallen and scattered them around, And find those fairy tents by magic there.

And reared it up in hosts of fairy tents.

Did each frail tent conceal an elfin sprite?

Christian Science has come to the world to heal mankind of its poverty-stricken thinking, to show to receptive thought that lack, limitation, and fear were never for a moment any part of God's plan for His joyful news that there are no unused, unwanted, unappreciated misplaced ideas in the divine Mind; that the all-loving Father-Mother unchanging love, tender care, and abundant supply ever available to all God's children.

That God's abundance is available now for each and all is being proved daily in the lives of many thousands who, before these glad tidings were brought to them through the study of Christian Science, were burdened with the illusion of lack and limitation. Christian Science never enjoins upon its students anything they cannot prove. In unselfed love and labor for mankind one may wait, "never doubting" that one will have all that is needed of wisdom, patience, forbearance, forgiveness, and courage to press on with the work God gives one to do.

Livery Companies

London's "livery companies" orig-inally were "guilds," or associations of craftsmen or traders for the proection of their craft or trade, and by aspection of the work of the craftsmen, provided the public with a guar-antee of quality. The name "guild" was changed to "livery company" by Edward III on account of the distinctive dress worn in connection with the different trades.

Convenient How often do we realize that the thing we call convenient is the thing which naturally and properly comes Letin con, "with," and venire, "to come," declare.

To the Anglo-Saxon, what is con venient is "haudy," right at hand, and the French emphasize the "suitableness," as that which follows the necessities of the occasion. In our use of the word we incorporate these ideas and find that whatever is well adapted to the ease and comfort of all, whatever saves time or trouble, is both helpful and favorable. It is always well to emphasize the thought in the first syllable, con, meaning "with." for pleasing oneself alone does not convey the idea of true convenience. Extending Neighborly Contacts

NCOURAGED by the increasing interest of business men, trade associations and members of state legislatures throughout the United States in the extension of the method of arbitration in commercial disputes, the American Arbitration Society has definitely undertaken the task of promoting the adoption, in thirty-seven states, of a uniform arbitration statute. This law would conform in its main provisions with the federal enactment and that already in force in several commonwealths. In addition to this, the society is seeking to induce a wider introduction of arbitration clauses in contracts, and to promote greater co-operation among those engaged in foreign trade.

The successful operation of arbitration in commercial disputes in recent years has been so convincingly proved that it is now generally accepted as an established method of modern jurisprudence. If there were prejudices against the system it was probably because, in the absence of special legislation, the findings or verdicts of arbitral bodies were not enforceable by legal means. Under the federal law, and under the laws of those states which have adopted the uniform arbitration code, the awards of arbitrators are as binding and enforceable as are the judgments of courts of record.

As the progress of this simple but effective method is studied, it presents, unfailingly, the possibility of a still broader application. As a first step there is indicated the practicability of applying the plan to contracts under which commercial relations between persons of differ-ent countries are conducted. It is a matter of common knowledge that disputes arise among factors and their principals, and between importers and exporters and their agents and customers. The expense of litigation, if it is sought to correct or adjust these differences, is often so great that losses are suffered by the aggrieved party or parties, with the result that further exchanges are discouraged and resentment is harbored. It is encouraging that there is being gained a more general appreciation of the practicability of the simple methods of conciliation and arbitration. With the realization that these can be applied satisfactorily and finally to the adjustment of the less important and less consequential disputes between individuals, there will come, quite logically, the willingness to adapt them to affairs of larger moment. It is, after all, the friendly and peaceful contacts between the peoples of neighboring countries that tend finally to remove the artificial barriers that have seemed to forbid or hinder true neighborliness.

"One Day"

TT IS sometimes remarked that the newspaper is an extremely ephemeral product and that today's issue is built on the ashes of yesterday's edition. Such a statement no doubt fairly characterizes that section of the press which devotes itself largely to the transient and the trivial, but the newspaper which is predominantly concerned with the worth while is a product of enduring value. This fact is interestingly illustrated by the publication in book form of the contents, exclusive of advertising, of a single edition of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. The book, appropriately called "One Day," contains 307 pages and, when its news is examined in the perspective of subsequent events, provides a panoramic picture of wide scope for the day of June 4.

A retrospective glance at some of the news and editorial discussion in the Bulletin of that particular day indicates how a single day's chronicle fits essentially into the continuing record of world affairs and how it serves to equip the reader to understand more fully the events to follow. Thus, selecting the events at random, we find that on June 4 last the Bulletin that the monoplane "Southern Cross," which was eventually to make its flight from California to Australia, reached the Fiji Islands on the first leg of its trip: that Miss Amelia Earhart, who, with her two co-pilots, that a train carrying Marshal Chang Tso-lin, war lord of Manchuria, which territory only recently raised China's new Nationalist flag, was bombed as it entered the Manchurian capital—an event which proved to be of farreaching political significance; that sentiment among the Republican administration leaders was tending cumulatively toward the nomination of Herbert Hoover.

Atlantic, landed her airplane at Trepassey preparatory to taking off for England;

On the same day the Bulletin also treated Canada's acceptance of the Briand-Kellogg multilateral treaty, in which Canada emphasized its view that, while the pact would certainly prove a valuable step toward preserving peace, it in no way hampered a nation either in its self-defense or in other peaceful acts; the paper also discussed the two essential problems confronting M. Poincaré, the French Prime Minister. These were the stabilization of the franc and the settlement of the war debts, the first of which Poincaré has virtually accomplished and the second of which is approaching solution.

It is perhaps interesting to know in passing that The Christian Science Monitor publishes daily a volume of reading material, exclusive of advertising, approximately the same as that which our enterprising Philadelphia contemporary carried on June 4, and that readers of the Monitor who take the opportunity to peruse their paper from beginning to end read daily a full-length book, chronicling and illuminating the valuable and enduring affairs of the world.

The Great American Diversion

TRAVEL has become the great American I diversion. Where the railways once enjoyed a virtual monopoly, competition now has become keen for the tourists' dollars. To develop pleasure travel by rail has, indeed, become a definite challenge to every railroad man, for the lure of the steamship, the motorcar and the air liner, with attractions of greater appeal at lower rates, is taking business from the rail lines annually. During the current winter season at least sixty special cruises are listed to the West Indies. A score or more are scheduled for the Mediterranean. Four vessels made world cruises and others went to South America and around Africa, not to mention the regular sailings to diverse points. With nearly 30,000 passengers on the cruise ships, at average expenditures of $500, the total money spent approximated $15,000.000, a substantial portion of which would have accrued to the railways had not their marine competitors secured it.

Yet "see America first" is not an obsolete term, for the numerous Pullman trains to Florida from New York, Chicago and other points, with through sleepers from places as far distant as Quebec, Denver, and even Los Angeles, encourage travel at home. From Chicago, the de luxe trains to California provide for more travelers who believe that, in seeing America first, they are seeing what is best, and that more exotic scenes may be reserved for later pilgrimages. Northward, the enthusiasts of wintersports turn to the Adirondacks, to Montreal and Quebec, and snowshoes and skis now vie with the golf bag and fishing tackle which accompany the visitors to the southland. It is indeed an era of travel. Travel is an integral part of present-day existence. Railway salesmanship is facing the challenge of the water, the highway and the air for patronage of tourists. It is a competition in which the potential travelers benefit through obtaining more abundant joys of travel at no greater expense. But it is a competition in which the anneal, "there is no car like the Pullman car," is still a potent one.

Inventive Women

A LTHOUGH the erstwhile relegation of all A women to a sphere of dusting and dishwashing has long since lost its powers of persuasion among thinking persons, there vet may be something of surprise in the fact that women have won a firm place in the world of inventors. It has been stated recently that from 1790 to 1910, in the United States alone, nearly 11.000 patents were granted on women's inventions; and that in England in a single year there were taken out by women 500 patents relating to motorcars, airplanes and various commercial objects. During 1914 patents were granted to women for the following utilities: a system of electrical distribution; control of an electric engine starter; an automatic lubricator; a new form of rivet; a wheeled luggage carrier; a parachute for airplanes, and a submarine. Moreover, the number of patents taken out by women seems decidedly on the increase.

Significance may be found, however, in a further fact: Women are reported especially active in the invention of cooking utensils, bathroom fixtures, nursery furniture, accessories for sewing machines, folding tables and other household articles. One woman has invented a doll that can walk, dance, sit down and do many other delights.

What woman, after all, does not hold precious the anchorage she counts as her home, whether it be an actuality or yet but a dream. Is it not satisfying that women of an inventive turn should originate means of greasing the wheels of house routine, of bettering the mechanism of domestic utilities, and of winning spontaneous laughter from the hearts of children. Women inventors: may their tribe increase! There is food for thought in the kndwledge that they have already made effective contributions in fields once considered the preoccupations of men alone: and there is wholesome promise in the realization that they have richly turned their powers of originality to bettering the working conditions of a realm in which they yet remain unchallenged experts.

Pay and Politics in France

THE old question of parliamentary pay has been revived in France. The arguments for and against have been freely used. It has been said that, in a modern democracy, no man should be debarred from giving his services to the nation for want of personal fortune. It has been said that, on the other hand, if a member of Parliament is paid, there is bound to spring up a class of professional politicians-no longer disinterested, but concerned with public affairs purely because they afford, in one form or another, a good livelihood.

The changes have been rung on these themes. Nobody, indeed, has proposed to suppress all salary; but many have urged that salaries for deputies should be kept as low as possible. While it is agreed that, if there is no salary, the poor citizen with legislative talents and with a special civic sense is necessarily excluded from Parliament, and only the comparatively rich citizen, who may be thinking more of the maintenance of the privileges of his rank than of the common weal, is admitted to Parliament, yet it is contended that the poor citizen should receive only the barest indemnity, in order that Parliament may not attract incompetent idlers by its glittering prizes. Originally the French deputies received 9000 francs a year-an amount which, at that time, was worth less than $2000 a year. Then the pay was increased to 15,000 francs. Last year it rose to 45,000. The present budgetary provisions bring it to 60,000 francs, at the current rate of exchange $2400 a year. Certainly this cannot be regarded as extravagant. Not only has the franc greatly depreciated in value, as compared with English and American currencies, but also the cost of living has considerably increased. The deputies today, even after the raising of their salaries, are probably. worse rather than better off.

The whole debate appears rather futile. The laborer is surely worthy of his hire; and when one considers that, while the majority of the deputies necessarily live outside Paris, in their constituencies, they must nevertheless, have rooms in Paris, if they are to attend the meeting of Parliament; that they cannot, if they conscientiously attend the meetings of the Chamber, give their attention to other business; that they have a vast amount of correspondence for which secretarial assistance is often necessary—then 60,000 francs a year appears to be a modest enough allowance. It is true that deputies are sometimes offered directorships in companies, but in the interests of financial honesty the deputies are now imposing upon themselves a self-denying ordinance. If Parliament is to be open to talent, irrespective of private wealth, then no democracy can afford to begrudge 60,000 francs a year to its publicly chosen representatives.

Mr. Sedgwick Retracts

THE Atlantic Monthly, openly acknowledging its error, announces that there will be no third installment of the controversial Lincoln-Rutledge articles. Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic, professes himself "convinced that the material lacks the authenticity which I have publicly ascribed to it"; and Miss Wilma Frances Minor, owner of the letters and documents which have caused such dispute since they first appeared in the December issue of the magazine, willingly withdraws her third article from publication. All of which may or may not close this incident finally.

For both Miss Minor and Mr. Sedgwick hint at further investigations which they have in hand, to the end that matters may be clarified and the doubts of historians and other experts dissipated. Meantime the public is bound to respect Mr. Sedgwick's honest confession of his fault, though the situation has necessarily become rather painful. Had the letters concerned others than the beloved figures of the young Lincoln and his devoted Ann- Had the material been presented by another magazine than the Atlantic Monthly, to which the public has come through long years to look with confidence-Somewhere the blame rests. One can only hope that "fresh facts" will be brought to light. For the sake alike of Miss Minor, the Atlantic Monthly and the public, this misunderstanding should be corrected.

January, Burns's Month

TANUARY, when the hills and glens are in the grip of frost or deep in snow, is Burns's month. It is then that the singer of matchless melodies is on the lips of Scotsmen remote from native heath or by the warm hearthstone of their own land. January never escapes them. Rather does it bring home with revivifying force the poems to which he gave voice and the songs he sang in words that are imperishable, songs which some of his admirers have carved on plaques on winter evenings, under scenes depicted in his works. For instance, the song of the maiden whom Burns chanced to spy in a lonely glade when he was musing among the "dewy fields":

> Her look was like the morning's eye Her air like nature's vernal smile Perfection whispered, passing by Behold the lass o' Ballochmyle, Burns's lyrics, unlike many modern songs, are not rhymed speech. Sincere in origin, they sing themselves, and at no time in the year are they oftener heard than during the month of January, for wherever Scotsmen gather there is a reminder of Burns.

Great names in literature have added luster to the pages of Scottish history-Scott, Campbell, Stevenson-but none has shone more brightly than that of Burns. He stands preeminent. Why? Because his songs have knit together the sons of a nation who are scattered all over the globe and who look for this particular month to revere his name. If it is true that a Scotsman's "heart ave warms tae the tartan," it is equally true that his eyes light up at the songs of Burns, and January never fails to provide him with the opportunity.

Lindbergh in Legend

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON

N A summer evening in 1927 I was sitting on a Paris terrace enjoying the lights and the commotion and the little cool breeze, when a rumor started nowhere and gained rapidly in volume and provoked fairy tales. There is only one that comes up to fairy tale standard—that of Lindbergh. Paris terrace enjoying the lights and the commotion and the little cool breeze, when a rumor started from nowhere and gained rapidly in volume and provoked an enthusiasm that I have never seen equaled. Lindbergh was approaching the French shores! We rose and rushed to Le Bourget, scarcely believing it possible that the quiet unassuming youth of whom we had vaguely heard had succeeded in traversing the great Atlantic.

But it was true. What excitement there was! And then for days Paris could not provide enough fêtes for the "flying fool." Ambassador Myron T. Herrick took the boy under his avuncular protection, and his kindliness and tact in those strenuous times made him more popular than ever. Explain it how you will, but it is an unquestionable fact that France and the United States were drawn closer together by the triumph of Lindbergh, and his exploit is to be numbered among the most important diplomatic events of recent years. I think it would be easy to show that the Briand-Kellogg pact came out of sky with Lindbergh-and who knows what farreaching effects the pact will prove to have?

But above all, we were impressed by Lindbergh's perfect behavior, his modesty, his absence of vulgarity, of blatancy, of mercenary designs. His first thought was not to "cash in," to exploit his exploit, to present himself as a hero. There was not a single false or jarring note in the whole of his stay in Paris. He remained simple and unspoiled; and many of us then were convinced that there was a vital connection between the cleanness of his feat and the cleanness of his life.

These things came back to me as I sat in the immens Theatre du Chatelet, which stands by the river Seine. There was Lindbergh on the stage. How could that be? Had not Lindbergh refused to appear on exhibition? Yes, but it was not really Lindbergh; though one had to rub one's eyes to be sure: it was Lindbergh's "double," very image of the airman, and he was the central figure of the play written by no less distinguished a dramatist than Sacha Guitry.

For Lindbergh has already passed into legend. He is very much alive in our busy work-a-day world, but he seems to us the immortal character of a fairy tale. Guitry did not make the mistake of giving us a realistic play for realistic plays are never real. He gave us a fairy tale for fairy tales are always true. On these vast boards of the Châtelet, Lindbergh is as unmistakably veridical as Prince Charming or Jack the Giant Killer. Others will fly the Atlantic; it may be that one day the air will be darkened by Atlantic fliers. But Lindbergh will remain Lindbergh, for he has become a legend.

It was a happy idea that the directors of the Châtelet had to retell for children-and are we not all children?the wonderful story of those summer days and nights when Lindbergh taught us that nothing is impossible. When you think about it, you will be astonished at the fewness of the outstanding fairy tales—those that everybody knows. The stock is seldom increased. There is, shall we say, perhaps one new fairy tale in every thousand years. It is, therefore, something to be present at the birth of a fairy tale.

The Chatelet is essentially the children's theater of Paris. That is why, other dramatic fare palling, I still go to the Châtelet. How we youngsters gasp at the magical scenes, the peripetia, the ravishing actors and actresses, and above all the dancer in tutu who is poised on one toe on the handle of a basket of flowers! I cannot count the number of years that the dancer in tutu has balanced herself to our unfailing amazement on the basket of

Why not a fairy tale taken from real life? That was what Sacha Guitry asked, and he set to work to renew the repertory of the Châtelet. Is there any other person whose name appears in the newspapers about whom one could write a fairy tale? Run the names of celebrated

So the story starts in the approved Châtelet manner: the grumpy old Breton Count who will not authorize the marriage of his son with an American girl. He does not want foreigners in his family. Naturally, after Lindbergh's arrival he gives his consent and all ends happily. What better plot than that do you want? In its essence it is familiar as plots should be, but there is a touch of novelty in the conversion of the nationalist to internation But the heart of the story is the flight of Lindbergh. There he is—impersonated remarkably by Chantraine—in his hangar, sleeping by his airplane. And there he is on the airdrome, with policemen and journalists and other modern fairies around him. And there he is over the

But there is a conspiracy. We are shown a crewd of disagreeable fairies taking counsel together. They are the hoary Ocean himself, and the Wind, and the Rain, and the Night, and the Cold, and the Thunder, and many other bugaboos. Ah, but there is also a good fairy to put them to rout-Youth!

The old children's theater has surpassed itself in those tableaus which represent Lindbergh above the Atlantic, the stormy sky around him, and the roaring expanse of sea below him. There is genuine poetry in this picture, and we see Lindbergh calm in his pilot's seat amid the elements; and the airplane, by a curious mechanical device, appears to be dashing straight at us at a tremen-dous speed, and is almost upon us as the curtain falls.

Why, there is Ambassador Herrick, made up to the life, with all his gestures and mannerisms, on the airdrome of Le Bourget, waiting to welcome Lindbergh. Something of the warmth of the Paris welcome is indeed conveyed, though nothing could possibly do justice to the experience of 1927. Then there is another conspiracy. The Wind and Cold have been foiled. But now there meet together more disagreeable fairies-Pride and Laziness and Avarice and other sins which might be supposed to assail Lindbergh. There is, however, always the good fairy—Youth!

Among the receptions is that of the Elysée Palace.

Entering the home of the President of the Republic are Blériot, and after him Briand, and Painlevé, and Poincaré, and Foch and other notabilities of France. The audience, juvenile as we were, recognized them all, and sent up little cheers. President Doumergue, himself, was cleverly caught by the actor in his manner as he is.

I said just now that one could not imagine the world's famous men, with the exception of Lindbergh, as heroes of a fairy tale; but I must add that all these distinguished personages in frock coats at any rate showed to advantage in the minor rôles of the fairy tale. The occasion was taken to put on an entertainment at the Elysée for Lindbergh—and for us, and there was some fine dancing by Lola Menzeli, who comes from America.

Nor is this all: We saw Christopher Columbus, and Icarus, and Montgolfier, and Phileas Fogg, and other legendary figures, some of whom were real before they became legendary, and others who were legendary before they became real, admitting Lindbergh into their society. And finally we were taken to New York, where the Mayor greeted Lindbergh, and there was a grand défilé of spectators, ballet dancers, soldiers and sailors and musicians, and the rest of the stage throngs.

Thus a fairy tale based on modern mechanical progress has been fashioned, and Lindbergh, of calm audacity, of simple faith, of unblemished character, of lovable personality, enters living into legend. It seems natural that it should be so; there is nothing banal or grotesque in such representation; and the moral of it all appears to be that we exist in times as great and valorous, as beautiful and chivalrie, as those of Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table, or as those of any other epoch which has become legendary.

THE urgent necessity of a more systems the rapidly increasing tratic has been met by the publication of an imposing traffic code, drawn up by the Ministers of Public Works, Communications, Justice and Home Affairs. The code contains 140 articles, grouped in four chapters, dealing respectively with the character and use of the roads, traffic regulations to be observed by vehicles and by pedestrians, and the punish ment of offenders. The visibility of the roads is to be obtained by prohibiting the building of houses and walls close to the roadsides and by allowing hedges and trees to grow to such a height as to obstruct the view. Pedes trians, vehicles and animals are to be kept to the right At a command of the traffic controller, expressed by voice or by the raising of the hand, the driver or the pedestrian, as the case may be, must immediately stop, on pain of a fine ranging from 25 to 200 lire, and to 500 lire in the case of motorcars. The speed limit for cars varies; for those weighing over forty quintals the speed is fixed at forty kilometers when supplied with pneumatic tires at thirty kilometers when with solid tires, and at fifteen kilometers when with metal tires. For all other cases the speed is to be regulated according to weight, type of brakes, and nature of the road.

Ever since Signor Mussolini became Prime Minister of Italy he has been besieged by a veritable army of autograph hunters. Every person who succeeds in seeing the Duce and having a short talk with him, invariably asks of him the present of a signed photograph of himself. Signor Mussolini has hitherto consented to all these requests, but this distribution of photographs has begun to annoy him, therefore he has decided not to give away any more signed pictures of himself. Signor Turati, the secretary of the Fascist Party, has sent a circular to the federal secretaries in which, after stating that Signor Mussolini has been subjected to numerous and incessant demands for photographs with dedication and autograph signature put forward by bodies or by single individuals, either direct or through the channels of public officials, orders them to reject any further request of this kind. 1 1 1

One of the houses discovered at Herculaneum is a Sannite patrician's villa. Traces of wooden staircases burned at the time of the eruption have been found; these stairs led to the so-called cubicula, or sleeping chambers, in the upper floors, which are in a good state of preservation and still have some fine frescoes. The remains of some furniture, including carved bedsteads and bronze ornaments, have been found. Another interesting discovery is that made in a second patrician villa, having a door way of wood and crystal leading to a spacious atrium and to the gynæseum, or the women's apartments. In this house a compluvium, or a plumbing system for gathering rain water and storing it for domestic use, has also been found. Opposite the Sannite villa a palestra or gymnasium building has been discovered, together with the apodyterum (bath dressing room) and the frigidarium (cold water bath), which indicate the presence of public baths that have still to be unearthed.

Among the various artistic finds brought to light are five bronze statues of Mercury, Diana, Apollo, a statue representing Abundance and a figure representing Silence. Another statue in marble, about three feet in height, of a Phrygian (African) slave has been found, as well as many terra-cotta vases and ornaments finely painted. A wellpreserved wooden oil press, five feet high, used for crushing olives, and similar to those in use in Campania today, has also been discovered. The authorities have decided to leave all these objects exactly in the same place and

ROME | spot where they were found, so as to give the visitor a Herculaneum.

The excavations at Herculaneum are proceeding so satisfactorily and the number of important finds made during eighteen months is so great, that archæologists are beginning to feel optimistic about their future work. They are full of hope and think that shortly Herculaneum will disclose some hidden treasure of first-class importance. The excavations have now reached a new stage, and a quadrivium, that is, a place where four roads of the city meet, has been discovered, while two more houses have been unearthed. Work is now proceeding along a roadway going from this quadrivium to the sea, and it is conjectured that this was the residential quarter of the city. and therefore the place where literary finds are most likely to be made. From the architectural standpoint the houses discovered at Herculaneum differ from those unearthed at Pompeii, as the former all have two stories besides the ground floor.

The congress of Fascist University Groups, which was recently held in Rome, was interesting because of some very frank admissions that the Fascist movement had not made as much progress as was expected among that class of young Italians who should normally develop into the leaders of the Nation. With that frankness which characterizes Fascist utterances, Signor Augusto Turati, the secretary of the Fascist Party, told the students that there was still some opposition to the organization of Italian universities on Fascist lines, adding that this opposition was not coming from students, who were in the great majority on the Fascist side, but was due to "certain passive resistances which are to be found everywhere when it is a question of working, creating and constructing." Signor Turati, however, was pleased to note that Italian university students were no longer the noisy youths of the old régime but, on the contrary, gave ample proof of their consciousness that they were living "in a historic age." The remarks of Signor Turati have been approved by Fascist writers who insist that the complete Fascistization" of teachers and professors should no longer be delayed.

The Film Censorship Board of the Home Department has ordered that in future all films of Neapolitan life which are considered "offensive" to Naples and to Italy will not be allowed to be shown in the picture theaters of Italy. The board's decision says:

In consideration of the fact that certain movie companies In consideration of the fact that certain movie companies persist in placing on the market films showing Neapolitan scenes which, although they have not yet completely disappeared from life in that city, are no longer characteristic of that population; and in consideration of the fact that such films based on beggars, ragamuffins, dirty alleys, rags and a people who are given to "dolce far niente" are a calumny against a population which is working to raise itself to the moral and material level of life given to the remainder of the country by the Fascist régime; and in consideration, finally, that such films are usually made with a complete disregard of artistic ideas and are unworthy of the beauties of nature showered on Naples—it has been decided to deny authorization to show such films to the public, as they offend the dignity of Naples and of the entire Neapolitan region. public, as they butter Neapolitan region.

A highly interesting discovery recently made is that of a rare codex in Slav of the four Gospels dating back to the middle of the fourteenth century. This codex was found in the library of old documents in the convent of the Dominican friars in Soriano, in southern Italy, which since it was abandoned by the monks after the sequestration of property belonging to religious institutions made by the Italian Government had been left in a state of
